You can apply for more than one award, for instance a Midwives Award and the Nicolette Peel Award. You may do this for the same project or for different projects. Please tailor your applications to be appropriate for each award.

Travel and location of award work

The Iolanthe Midwifery Trust does consider projects involving international travel. Consideration will be given to overseas placements where there are clear learning objectives which demonstrate a view to maintaining ongoing partnership and collaborative working which is mutually beneficial. However applicants should be aware of the following stipulations:

- Priority will be given to projects taking place in the four nations of the UK;
- Student midwives are encouraged to seek elective placements in a part of the UK that presents a contrast to (or builds upon) their prior experience, for example in urban areas, rural areas or within specific communities.
- We do not fund placements with commercial travel organisations such as 'Work the World';
- Where overseas work is funded, the charity would be looking for applications that:
 - Demonstrate a consideration of the ethical issues that may arise from overseas award activity;
 - Identify specific career development goals that will be met by the overseas award activity;
 - Demonstrate cultural familiarity and an ongoing relationship with the intended location, or detailed plans to develop this;
 - Show how the award activity would fall within any university or organisational travel restrictions;
 - Demonstrate an intention to meaningfully engage, learn and develop during the overseas award activity. Longer placements are more likely to be funded than shorter 'observation' placements.
 - Demonstrate how learning from the award activity will be disseminated to other midwives, student midwives or health practitioners in the UK.

Conference attendance

The Iolanthe Midwifery Trust is able to fund conference attendance. However applicants should be aware of the following stipulations:

- Priority will be given to conferences taking place within the four nations of the UK;
- Priority will be given to those presenting their work at a conference rather than attending the conference as a delegate;
- Applicants need to give a rationale for choosing a particular conference and the specific career development goals that will be met by attending;
- Applicants need to demonstrate how others will also benefit from their attendance at the intended conference. This might include clear plans to disseminate the learning to other midwives, student midwives or health practitioners.

A Guide to Writing a Good Application

	What goes wrong?	How to improve your chance of funding
The purpose of the application	Giving too little information about your proposed project or just copying information from elsewhere (eg academic course objectives)	Clearly justify your choice of project and tell us what makes it worthwhile or innovative. Identify how it will improve midwifery care and practice around baby loss and bereavement; this can include early pregnancy loss. Projects which address health inequalities for ethnic communities or target vulnerable groups are also viewed more positively.
Benefits from the project	Not giving enough thought about how you, your employer, the midwifery profession, maternity services and women/families will benefit.	Spell out the benefits of your project to yourself and others (parents and families, other midwives, and the profession and/or employer). Explain how you will share your experience or the knowledge that you gain.
Costs	Including excessive, irrelevant or personal costs Not being clear in your project description about what the money will be spent on	Give detailed well-researched costs with a brief justification for why these are included. Include precise details on what the money will be spent on in the section describing your project. Don't include personal costs which you are not expecting to get funded (e.g. holiday excursion). Provide evidence of other fundraising – we view this positively as a sign of commitment.
The overall quality of the application	Missing out sections and applications which are too long and unfocused. Applications which don't convey conviction or interest.	Make sure your application is complete, well presented and readable. Use the word counts to help focus the information. Reference your application with research or policy if appropriate but not excessively. Write with feeling and persuasion.
Support and commitment.	Not enough evidence of support to do the project.	Include a supporting letter from your manager/academic lead/course tutor. If possible, ask for a personal reference rather than a standard letter. Acknowledge other support, eg time off or part-funding. Please ensure you give those people providing a supporting letter enough notice. Supporting information cannot be added after the application deadline.
